WHAT CAN YOU DO WITH ONLY ONE SHOE?
Reuse, Recycle, Reinvent

Simon and Sheryl Shapiro
art by Francis Blake
Someone just gave me a planter.
She got it from I-don’t-know-where.
I must say the shape is peculiar.
I must say I really don’t care.

I’ll plant it with flowers that start with a P,
which seems an appropriate letter.
With purple petunias and pansies and phlox,
I can’t think of anything better.

But if I get tired of these plants, version one,
I’m certain of what I will do.
I’ll simply reach out
and I’ll flush them away,
and replace them with
plants number two.
Someone just gave me a planter.
She got it from I-don't-know-where.
I must say the shape is peculiar.
I must say I really don't care.
I'll plant it with flowers that start with a P,
which seems an appropriate letter.
With purple petunias and pansies and phlox,
I can't think of anything better.
But if I get tired of these plants, version one,
I'm certain of what I will do.
I'll simply reach out
and I'll flush them away,
and replace them with
plants number two.
One Shoe

What can you do with only one shoe?

You can hop, hop along 'til the sole wears right through.

You can wear it on top of your head like a hat.

You could use it to make sure your pancake is flat.

You could cook it and eat it—a leathery steak—though you might end up getting a big stomach ache.

But the silliest, uselessest thing—you'd agree—is to nail that lonely old shoe to a tree.
ONE SHOE

What can you do with only one shoe?
You can hop, hop along 'til the sole wears right through.

You can wear it on top of your head like a hat.
You could use it to make sure your pancake is flat.

You could cook it and eat it—a leathery steak—though you might end up getting a big stomach ache.

But the silliest, uselessest thing—you’d agree—is to nail that lonely old shoe to a tree.